Digital technologies and innovation processes have profoundly changed communication, processing, and production. The programme covers the techniques, organisation, communication and promotion tools used in the luxury fragrance and cosmetics industry, focusing on the latest technologies, including viral platforms, digital, magazines, social media and all the AR, AI and virtual communication tools without forgetting traditional communication tools very specific like multisensorial packaging, events, product placement.

In the course, at least 2 exams will be based on Project work developed in collaboration with Companies: students will be brief as consultant or agency teams and develop a communication omnichannel strategy or a specific digital innovative content. Communication and innovation management are actually vital to strengthening and implementing advertising campaigns, communication plans and promotional activities through the most appropriate channels, reflecting a brand's vision or image: they have a strategic role in a perfume and cosmetic product launch and can determine its success. Learners will plan and manage presentations, events, social media calendars/plans, and PR activities and actively use the most recent media outlets, such as influencer and content marketing as well as CRS and inclusivity as marketing tools.

An additional focus is placed on innovation management processes and strategies, i.e. by analysing the relationship between perfumery, cosmetics and technology to find and apply new applications in production, distribution and marketing processes. Expert managers will present successful cases to help ignite creative ideas and insights. Students will acquire extensive knowledge and skills in communication, art direction techniques & communication through packaging for fragrances and beauty products while also experiencing the strategic value of the metaverse environment & digital experiences. They will delve into trend analysis and storytelling, visual communication, Fragrances' creation techniques, as well as sociology, cultural and context studies.

Final Project (Dissertation)

The final project will be developed according to the student interest and vocation, with a practice based approach. Under the supervision of an expert tutor each student will explore a specific field and application, developing an analysis and a proposal useful for his professional future. Students interested in creative direction could develop a new visual identity for an existing fragrance or a new packaging, the ones while other ones could imagine a communication and marketing plan of a new capsule collection of cosmetics based on a collaboration in a specific geographical market. The project will be delivered in a formal document, with the appropriate writing style and editing and then presented in front to a commission.
